#Loeries2017: ALL THE WINNERS!

20 Aug 2017

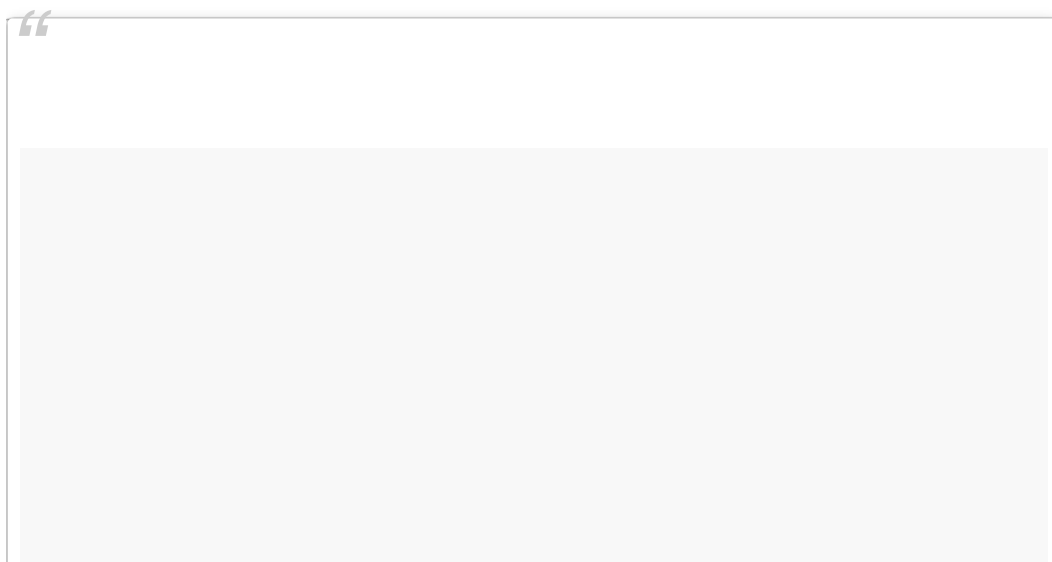

That’s certainly impressive, but the agency is by no means resting on its laurels following its Loeries showing. In fact BBDO Africa’s regional director, Gau Narayanan, with the agency for almost three years, shares:

“ What’s keeping me up at night is the future of our business. A lot of my time is occupied by looking at howto disrupt the agency model so we are still relevant next year and the year after. ”

The success of this strategy is evident in this year’s Loeries Rankings:

Official 2017 Loeries rankings revealed!

6 Oct 2017

I spoke to Narayanan to find out how BBDO plans to extend their winning streak next year and which agencies they admire most in the industry...

📌 What do you attribute this year's successes to?

It has been building over the past few years. From the two Grands Prix last year, to Impact BBDO stealing the show in 2015, our success comes down to two things – firstly, great clients; secondly, our people. What's important is the breadth of clients we're winning on and the kind of work that is winning. Take, for example, our Loto Libanais campaigns. We're starting to build on past success and develop great work more consistently. And this work is winning creative and effectiveness plaudits. The same goes for our work on Libresse Vagina Varsity.

Secondly, we're winning in a raft of categories, and this is a testament to our people as well as to BBDO's culture. This kind of work is more complicated and demands a mindset that is inclusive and collaborative, with an ability to bring a longer cast list of contributors along for the ride, whether they work at BBDO or not. Our job is to orchestrate this coalition to serve the client's brand and business.

■ What plans are already underway to better your ranking next year?

We will continue to ensure the sweet-spot of technology and human understanding augments our work. That's where the data-driven magic happens. Analytics that power in-house content capabilities, that helps us tell stories that move people and product. The link between strategic planning and creativity is getting stronger and it shows in the creative and effectiveness of our work. And we're starting to develop more than just advertising and content – we're designing apps, helping our clients with product innovation through design.

To enable this, we're starting to work with a divergent set of partners from around the world, outside advertising and production – for example, VR houses, MIT, Google and Facebook. We're excited by the possibilities and hope to enter work that we've never entered before next year!

■ Definitely exciting! How does this year's Loeries flock differ from your haul last year?

It's always great to win Loeries, they're an important part of our year. They give us the ability to judge ourselves against our peers, as the awards act as a magnet for talent and they give our clients the credit they richly deserve.

BBDO at Loeries 2017.

For me, the kind of work we're entering, the number of categories we're winning in, and the number of brands we're winning awards for is important. We're seeing a broader and deeper mix here and more consistency.

■ That's for sure. Tell us two people you personally admire in the industry in 2017 – both an established mentor figure as well as a newcomer making waves.

Rather than two figures, I'd rather pick two companies. Firstly, I'm huge fan of Colenso BBDO. An agency that was 70 strong about a decade ago and was doing good work has been transformed. The leaders of that transformation have been Nick Worthington, the ECD, who I very briefly worked with at AMVBBDO; and Nick Garrett, the CEO. But it's not about these two men.

It's about the culture, mindset and creativity they have inspired in an agency now 150-strong. What's interesting for South Africa is that a small country, with a small advertising community has managed to punch disproportionately above its weight. The work coming out of this office has been phenomenal – from a creative and effectiveness standpoint, they are consistently up there as one of the best agencies in the world. And the kind of work they are doing for such a diverse set of clients is truly inspiring.

Secondly, I recently judged the AdFocus Awards and I was very impressed with Clockwork Media – a new shop that has been taking the local PR scene by storm.

The type of work they have been doing, the innovative nature of how they work and the capabilities they offer clients is really interesting. They've had a stellar start, the catch is whether they can sustain it and deliver that difficult second album. They're definitely one to watch.

Lots to look forward to from 2018! Click through to our Loeries' special section for more, here and here for more on Absolut One Source, and be sure to follow BBDO Africa on Twitter and Instagram.
